Question 1

a. Read the passage and answer the questions that follow

Earthworms are long, round animals that live in moist, rich soil. They have no spine, legs or feet. Their pinkish brown bodies are made up of rings of segments that are covered with tiny hair called setae, which help the worms to move along. Earthworms spend most of their lives underground. They feed on soil that contains decaying animal or plant. They eat large amounts of soil and digest it in their bodies. They leave their waste on top of the ground called worm casts.

Earthworms help to make the soil fertile. They enrich it with their waste and they also loosen it as they burrow through the ground. This helps air and water to enter the soil.

Animals, birds and fish all eat worms. So anywhere you find worms, you will find birds, animals, plants and rich soil.
